ADMINISTRATIVE HISTORY:

Calgary Jewish Academy, often referred to as CJA, or Hebrew School, was created in 1986 by the merger of the Calgary Hebrew School (later known as the Charles Waterman Talmud Torah) founded in 1912, and the I.L. Peretz School, founded in 1927.

Jewish education in Calgary began in 1910, with 19 students in a one-room cheder -- religious school for boys -- on the House of Jacob synagogue site. In 1912, the Jewish residents of Calgary elected a Council (Va'ad Hair) to coordinate its religious and educational institutions; the education committee, chaired by Mr H. Cooper, promptly established a talmud torah, a Hebrew school. The principal was Rabbi Solomon Roubin, and the first teacher was Judah Shumiatcher. In 1913, with input from J. Diamond, S. Jaffe, B. Margolis and M. Olin, the after-school program, which provided Hebrew and Jewish (Yiddish) education to some 100 students, both boys and girls, separated from the synagogue. Funds were contributed by the community at large, both through direct appeals and by way of events like the Grand Ball that was held in February 1914, which raised over $150 for the school. Various challenges, including the difficulty of engaging qualified staff, saw the school lapse for a few years, but by the end of WWI momentum had been restored, and in 1919 Mr. A.H. Goldberg was appointed chairman of a campaign to raise funds and re-vitalize the Talmud Torah.

The Calgary Hebrew School was first incorporated, under the “revised ordinances of the North West Territories”, in January 1920, and later that year a house was purchased on 6th Avenue E to accommodate the growing enrollment. The school was incorporated again in 1927, “with the advice and consent of the Legislative Assembly of Alberta”. It was at this time that Yiddish was dropped from the curriculum, reflecting the generally religious and Zionist stance of many of its founders. This prompted the establishment of the I.L. Peretz School, a wholly separate entity, with a Yiddish-based focus perceived as both more secular and more political.

When the House of Israel building opened in 1930 as the centre for Calgary’s Jewish community, the Hebrew School, with its primarily after-school classes, became a major tenant; in the mid-1940s, correspondence used letterhead that read “The Amalgamated House of Israel and Calgary Hebrew School”. Rabbi Aron Horowitz’s principalship, which began in 1942, added Hebrew speaking clubs and a summer camp to the school’s offerings. In 1954 the Hebrew School became a full Jewish day school, offering classes from kindergarten through grade six. This initiative was led by Charles Waterman, president of the school, and Nate Safran, chairman of its board of education. The school also offered evening classes for both post-elementary-school children, and adults.

In 1958, with the community increasingly moving south of the inner city, Waterman played a major role in the decision to acquire land at 14th Street and 66th Ave SW (later Glenmore Trail), and the purpose-built Charles Waterman Talmud Torah opened in 1959, with 140 students. Additional classrooms and an auditorium were constructed during the 1960s, along with a gymnasium in 1970. A Junior High day school program was established in 1968, and the school continued to offer evening classes. Enrollment grew to almost 400, and beginning in 1977, the school offered full-credit Hebrew classes for public high school students.

For most of its existence, the Talmud Torah was a private parochial school. In the 1970s, primarily due to changes in government education funding and structure, the school became a designated “alternative school” of the Calgary Public School Board, as did the I.L.Peretz School. When the alternative school program ended in 1984, both institutions became private schools associated with the Calgary Separate School Board.

The possibility of a merger of the Hebrew and Peretz Schools had been discussed – and dismissed – many times over the years. During the mid-1980s, two Peretz educators, Shimshon Heilik and Aron Eichler, were able to move their school away from its earlier radical roots, and the Hebrew School leaders moderated their Hebrew-only stance. This allowed the schools to reach a merger agreement in 1986, and Calgary Jewish Academy began classes in September 1987, in the Charles Waterman Talmud Torah building. Students and faculty were blended, and Hebrew and Yiddish continued to be taught, along with the full provincial curriculum.
